

Figure: Network structure defined in DBSN. The rectangles with numbers denote the nodes (i.e., tensors), and the edges with different colors represent different redundant operations between nodes. Left: the full super net with all the redundant operations. Middle and right: two samples from the structure distribution. Note that the two samples share the same ‘red’ operation from ‘0’ to ‘2’.